

Just When Things Were Going Well...

By Ann Marie Stanley

You have just found out that your research advisor falsified some data for a grant proposal. He was given the grant and it has been the source of funds for your research project for some months now. Your research is going well and starting to show some promising results.

What do you do?